Report on:

- 1. Gay people who do other activities and make money from them.
- 2. Priests who do other activities and make money from them.
- 3. People who hate making money but who do other activities anyway and Make money from them.

Section 1: Gay People

A new study shows that gay couples earn more than different-sex counterparts. Women who are in same-sex couples and in the labor force tend to make far more money than similar women in heterosexual couples, while men in gay couples tend to make slightly less than their heterosexual counterparts. People in gay couples are also more likely to be in the labor force (that is, working or looking for a job) than their heterosexual counterparts, and they're far more likely to be highly educated.

Those are a few of the datapoints from a new report on the demographics of America's same-sex couples. The Williams Institute, a think tank at UCLA that focuses on LGBT issues, has dissected Census data from 2005 through 2011 to create a detailed picture of the demographics of men and women who live with people of the same sex. And while the economic findings are at first puzzling—why would gay women earn so much money, while men in same-sex homes tend to take an earnings hit.

5: k.d. Lang: Singer-songwriter

The most famous gay woman in music, k.d. (kathryn dawn) lang (lower case intentional) hails from Alberta, Canada. In her early twenties she formed a Patsy Cline tribute band but it was her second album 'A Truly Western Experience' that gained her attention in her homeland. Lang continued in the Country music genre, winning a Grammy for her duet with Roy Orbison ('Crying'). Another Grammy (for her third album) and more Country-tinged torch song recordings followed as well as a single with Country divas Loretta Lynn, Brenda Lee and Kitty Wells. Her 1992 multi-platinum breakthrough album moved her into adult contemporary pop; 'Ingenué' reached #3 in the UK, contained her biggest hit 'Constant Craving' and netted another Grammy.

Sappho: The mother of all lesbian poets (Writer)

Sappho was a lyric poet loved throughout the ages for the beauty of her writing. Her poems were collected into nine volumes in ancient libraries, but today only one complete poem survives. Then we have one sixteen-line fragment and the rest are bits, known mostly from later writers who quoted her work. In spite of this tragic loss, the intensity and power of her poetry can still be felt.

17. Casey Coleman: Engineer priests

It was all very logical, and as someone coming from a scientific background where everything is governed by the laws of physics, logical is good. In fact, the faith is super-logical or super-reasonable meaning it is above or beyond reason, but not illogical or unreasonable or contrary to logic or reason. So to some degree, it made a lot more sense than a lot of things and it heightened my understanding of the world. So when I started to recognize God calling me to the priesthood it made sense. - See more at:

18. MARK LAWLOR: Engineer priests

By the age of 16, I knew that I wanted to be an engineer. It made sense. I enjoyed working on mechanical devices such as bicycles and eventually old cars, and I was much better in math than in other subjects.

My father was a chemical engineer and he worked in a chemical plant. He oversaw many mechanical and system projects. In high school, I also worked part-time for the same company in the maintenance department. I learned a lot working around experienced mechanics. engineering was a practical application of my skills and aptitude. I see my priesthood as a calling from God. I believe we will find our greatest fulfillment when our will is accepting of God's will. -

20. JAMES STUHRENBURG: Engineer priests

I began my career as a project engineer for the U.S. Department of the Navy after earning a Bachelor of Science in electrical engineering from UNC-Charlotte in 1987. I worked on H46 helicopters as a project engineer in aviation electronics. I also worked on communications systems and navigation systems – just about anything with a wire attached to it in the aircraft. I worked my way up to project manager over the years. –

I was praying for vocations, for other people to become priests. God said, “What about you?” I said, “I was waiting for someone else.” God just kept bringing it up in prayer and in conversations with other people. A lady from the church and other ladies at church would come up to me and say, “You would make such a good priest.” So I finally gave in. And I love being a priest.

Section 3: People who hate making money

A job, however lucrative, is a job after all. There are rules to follow and protocol to adhere to. Sometimes it’s a compromise of who you are. But every once in a while there emerge people who listen to their inner calling, say enough is enough, and go on to follow their passion. People who actually did. The fat salary, the cushy secure job, and a stable life couldn’t deter these people from treading a path less traveled – one fraught with risks, uncertainty and financial instability – all to follow their passion. Whether it was to pursue a hobby, giving back to the society or starting a business, they all took the plunge from the corporate into a life of their own terms. Their stories are illuminating and inspiring.

Vinnie Kapoor: Professional makeup artist and founder at Gild by Vinnie Kapoor

She quit finance to get into beauty.

Meet Vinnie Kapoor, who quit her secure corporate job at American Express.. I was performing at top in my team and at a time my other friends were dying to get into such a big company!" However, Vinnie didn't think twice before giving it all up for becoming a makeup artist. It's been her passion since she was a little girl. And she's glad that her dream has finally come true. She is relieved that instead of being stuck in a boring, grey office dealing with money and investments, she's bringing beauty into people's lives, quite literally.

Devendra Purbiya: Wedding Photographer

Quit his tech job to get into photography

Back in the day (we are talking 2009) when photography was not as mainstream as it is today, and DSLRs were unheard of, this IIT Kharagpur grad, “small town boy”, and engineer took a big leap of faith and quit his job at Samsung India to turn into a fulltime shutterbug.

Dev’s love affair with photography started after he bought a DSLR on a whim while on a work trip in South Korea. He started a “Photo a day” feature on Facebook, which earned him rave reviews. Today Devendra is one of the most sought after wedding photographers in the country. How has his life changed?
